With this unusual documentary, director Esther Robinson tries to uncover the truth about her uncle, Danny Williams, and his mysterious disappearance back in 1966. Although unknown today, Williams was a key member of the New York Factory scene and one of Andy Warhol's inner circle. In fact, for a short while, Williams and Warhol were even lovers. Using interviews gleaned from familiar Factory faces like Paul Morrissey, John Cale and Gerard Malanga, Esther Robinson tries to piece together the truth - although the conflicting opinions and disparate recollections do little to clarify matters. Time hasn't dulled the bitchiness in many cases and some interviewees are all too happy to speak ill of the dead! It may be too scrappy for casual viewers, but A Walk Into The Sea is an interesting piece of work that will fascinate Warhol/Factory obsessives. TL
