Esther Robinson's restless documentary about her uncle, Danny Williams, one-time lover of Andy Warhol and a talented film-maker, is less an investigation into the truth behind his disappearance in 1966 than an attempt to resurrect his all-but-forgotten character. Through interviews with Paul Morrissey, Billy Name and Brigid Berlin, among others, Robinson may be ultimately frustrated in her ambition, but she does some much-needed damage to the immense Warhol myth-making machine. ■
